I've had my Qubies for a few years now and they have had a workout but still look brand new!

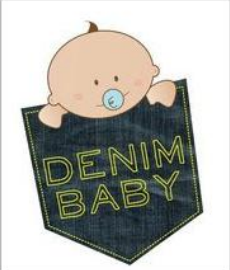

My girls have all gotten past the baby food stage but I will be there again in about 7 months time and with even less time on my hands to cook up something for the new bub each meal so I'm sure they will be getting well used.

I do still get good use out of them. We have a HUGE lemon tree in the backyard and rather than end up throwing half of them out I have been squeezing the juice into the Qubies and freezing it. Was starting to get low but the lemons are just ripening up again now.

This pregnancy though I have LOVED chomping on some ice and orange juice so I have combined my 2 loves and poured my orange juice into the Qubies and now have bags of these yummy iceblocks to chew on whenever the cravings hit (much healthier than my other craving hot chips and gravy!!!)

You can get some other ideas from their Facebook page on what to use them for. I need to remember to use them for leftover sauces like pesto and egg whites which I always seem to forget about in the fridge, also tomato paste would be great as I freeze our homemade bases so would have one cube of tomato paste for one base! Hmmm I could really get carried away and have snap lock bags all over my freezer!

One of the big pluses for me is the fact they are BPA, PVC and Phthalate free.

Available directly from the Qubies website, these online stores or Toys R Us stores nationally.

Thanks to Qubies one lucky Bub & Moo reader will win one of the new pink Qubies!!!
